FROM OUR PASTOR, FATHER AMATO

We now make our final approach to the Consecration of the bread and wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, into the Holy of Holies. Last week we saw how we invoke the help of all of heaven and we recognize our place within the Communion of Saints as we worship God with them. In these next two prayers that immediately precede the Consecration, again the priest directly asks God to accept the bread and wine we offer and explicitly prays that they become the Body and Blood of Christ:

"Therefore, Lord, we pray: graciously accept this oblation of our service, that of your whole family; order our days in your peace, and command that we be delivered from eternal damnation and counted among the flock of those you have chosen. Through Christ our Lord.

Be pleased, O God, we pray, to bless, acknowledge, and approve this offering in every respect; make it spiritual and acceptable, so that it may become for us the Body and Blood of your most beloved Son, our Lord Jesus Christ."

The second of these prayers is older and was definitely in place in the Roman Canon since at least the 4th century. The three verbs ("bless," "acknowledge," and "approve") and two adjectives ("spiritual" and "acceptable") partly come from Roman law courts and indicate a transaction of sorts. This is explained below. In the older form of the Mass, prior to 1970, the priest extends his hands over the offerings while praying the first prayer. In the current Mass, he extends his hands during the second of these prayers. Why would this change?

In many ancient liturgies, particularly in the East (Greek, etc.), there is a prayer called an Epiklesis. This is simply a type of prayer where the Holy Spirit is invoked upon the offerings, so that God may change them into the Body and Blood of Christ. It is accompanied by the gesture of the priest extending his hands since this is the gesture by which the Holy Spirit is given, as is shown to us in Scripture.

The other reason why the priest extends his hands over the gifts is not so obvious. Previously, when the priest extends his hands over the first of the prayers given here, it is meant to show the transfer of one to another. Specifically, it is the transfer of guilt. It expresses vicarious atonement. In the Old Testament, at the sacrifice of atonement, the priest would extend his hands over the animal, showing that the guilt of their sins has passed from them to the animal who will now be sacrificed.

At every Mass we have before us the perfect sacrifice, the true Paschal Lamb, who takes away the sins of the world. The extension of the priest's hands over the bread and wine now shows us the truth of Christ's perfect sacrifice on the Cross, which made total satisfaction for our sins, a truth expressed only in shadow in the Old Covenant.

In Christ,
Father Amato
